Or another question: What mineral looks like silk and will not burn? To answer this, the child must go to the mineral cases and carefully scrutinize the specimens for one that has a silky appearance. Then when he finds Asbestos by reading the label beneath it, he learns that Asbestos will not burn and is the correct answer. A gray card of one unit value will be given for each tray or series of forty questions finished in the games. Three additional units, a white card, will be given to all children completing the entire six series of Museum Games. At present the games are being played on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Each child is permitted to play one day a week. A blue card, two credits, will be awarded for each of the Preliminary Study Courses taken. The subjects of these courses are Minerals, Fossils, Birds, General Insects, Butterflies, Flowering Plants and Shells. Three of these classes are now being conducted: a class on Insects on Tuesday afternoon, on Minerals, Wednesday afternoon, and the Study of Birds on Saturday afternoon. The object of these courses is to create in the child an interest in one or more of the subjects just named, thereby stimulating his desire for the broader knowledge which the Advanced Study Course affords. Simple tests in identification of specimens will be given at the conclusion of each course. A Laboratory Course for which a...
