Reviews

This publication will be worth purchasing. It really is written in simple terms instead of difficult to understand. It's been designed in an exceptionally simple way and is particularly only right after I finished reading this ebook in which basically modified me, alter the way I believe.

Excerpt: . . . has proved to us that this crosswise undercutting affords an excellent hold. The bold is still further increased if we cut the gutters by holding the diamond disc, not at right angles, but at an acute angle to the ground porcelain inlay, and if we provide one half of the inlay with gutters running to the left, and the other half with gutters running to the right. The gutters should be cut as deeply as the ground inlay allows, and they should also reach over the edge, whereby the hold will be still greater. For the undercutting of ground inlays I only employ diamond discs, not FrG. 43. the very small ones, only the medium and large; but thin metal discs fed with wet carborundum powder are by many recommended for this purpose (Fig. 44). In undercutting the inlay, porcelain dust mixed with water coloured by the copper of the diamond disc becomes fixed in the fine gutters and Shows how the diamond disc is held when making the grooves or gutters on the inner end of the inlay. there forms lines of dark appearance. These must, of course, be removed before we think of cementing-in the inlay, not only because they make the transparent porcelain appear darker in colour, but also because the cement cannot enter the gutters so thoroughly if they are left partially clogged up. We must not employ excavators, tempting as they are, for clearing out the gutters, because in...
